

Independence of the professions

I see from your editorial on April 1 that you welcome the fact that the Office of Fair Trading is to investigate the professions. Some 30 years ago, when I was chief executive of a professional body (the RICS) the consultant professions fought tooth and nail to repel a similar attack. We were successful. I wrote a book and many articles giving reasons why it was in the public interest to retain independent self-governing professions. What has changed?
