

Letter to The Daily Telegraph

David Cameron and the Rule of Law

Sir,

David Cameron's threats against the three accused Labour MPs suggest that he fails to understand the rule of law, [under which we are proud to live]. This insists that a man is to be treated as innocent unless and until proved guilty. It also requires a man to be tried under the law prevailing at the time of his alleged offence, not some later manipulation of it.

Francis Bennion, retired Parliamentary Counsel.

Note Words in square brackets omitted on publication.